

This quarter students learned how our classroom runs and became a permanent part of the classroom decor. Every year each student in all of my math classes has the opportunity to create a puzzle piece that is added to the puzzle showing how we are all different but we all have something to add to the big picture. This a tradition that was started three years ago and the students really enjoy it.

This quarter we have also been working on changing our mindset when it comes to math. I have been focusing on the fact that math can be challenging but with practice and effort everyone can be a math person.
